UN Agenda 2030 for Sustainable Development
Global Goals for Achieving Sustainable Development

The United Nations 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development is the most comprehensive set of global priorities for achieving sustainability. It was adopted in 2015 and includes 17 goals and 169 targets to support global transformation towards sustainability (more information available at: SDGs - Sustainable Development Goals). The main principles of the Agenda are integration, universality, and transformation. Although the Agenda is not legally binding, it serves as a guideline for countries in shaping their national policies.

Slovakia is implementing the Agenda through the document "Initial situation for the Implementation," with the coordination responsibility falling under the Deputy Prime Minister's Office. The Ministry of the Environment focuses on environmental goals such as climate change, biodiversity protection, and sustainable use of natural resources.

The Agenda is centred on five pillars: People (eradicating poverty and hunger), Planet (environmental protection), Prosperity (balancing development and nature), Peace (just and inclusive societies), and Partnership (global cooperation). The goal of the Agenda is to improve the living conditions of people and ensure a sustainable future for our planet.
